The old man lived in a small house, in a grey land.

Under the old man's hand, a forest grew.

A forest made of rubbish.

A forest made of tin.

It was not the forest of his dreams, but it was a forest just the same.

Then one day across the windswept plain a small bird flew.

The old man spilled some crumbs from his sandwiches onto the ground. The bird ate the crumbs and perched to sing a beautiful song in the branches of a tin tree.

But the next morning the visitor was gone and the old man was very lonely.
